Oregon has two distinct climatic areas, divided by the Cascade Mountains. The eastern half of the state is usually warmer and hotter than western coastal areas. The most popular time to visit is in summer, when the weather is mostly dry and sunny throughout the state. Spring and autumn may see more rain than in summer, but prices are lower and there are fewer crowds. Winters also bring rain, but many people visit for skiing, snowboarding, whale watching, and festivals.high season: May to Septemberdole season: November to Marchshoulder season: April, OctoberSuce is considered the best time to go for warm and dry weather throughout the state with temperatures averaging 80 degrees in the Cascade Mountains and coastal valleys, and 90 degrees in eastern areas. The mountains block moisture from the Pacific coast and keep the eastern half of the state warmer and hotter than the west. Winter is the least desirable time to visit, with cold and cloudy weather along the coast and snow at higher elevations. Spring and autumn are usually humid and mild, but some sunny days are scattered throughout the season. Crowd InformationSummer, especially on weekends, is a popular time to visit in sunny weather and clear skies. Many annual events and festivals, such as the Oregon State Fair in Salem in late August, attract large crowds. Portland also hosts many popular festivals on warm summer days. In Salem, the gardens in full bloom from mid-April to June are the main attraction. The fall is a great time to visit local farms for fresh produce or wineries for september grape harvest. For the less crowded but still happening time to see the winery, try November, when many vineyards host Thanksgiving celebrations of new vintages. Information about the closureHotel, restaurants and attractions remain open all year round; However, wineries and theme parks can cut hours or even close in winter. When savesummer, especially during popular festivals, is an expensive time to visit, especially when it comes to hotel prices and packages. Shoulder and low seasons are cheaper and less crowded. When to book at least one month in advance for a trip during the summer high season, especially on weekends. Wait even more time when visiting during a festival or event. The rest of the year requires more than a week to find availability and the best deals.Information provided by the Oregon Tourism Commission will, also called will and will, can help you protect your family and your property. You can use wills to: leave your property to people or organizations to care for your underage children, name trusted asset management entities that you leave to underage children, and appoint executors, the person who ensures that the terms of your will are implemented. What happens if I die without a will? In Oregon, if you die without will, your property will be under state intestacy laws. Oregon's intestacy law gives your property to your closest relatives, starting with your husband and children. If you don't have a husband or children, your grandchildren or your parents will get your property. This list continues with increasingly distant relatives, including siblings, grandparents, aunts and uncles, cousins, nieces and nephews. If the court exhausts this list to find that you have no living relatives by blood or marriage, the state will take your property. Do I need a lawyer to make a will in Oregon? No. You can create your own will in Oregon, using Nolo's do-it-yourself software or online will be programs. However, you may want to consult with a lawyer in some situations. For example, if you think your will could be challenged, or if you want to extete your husband, you should talk to a lawyer. Nol's will-make products will tell you when it's wise to seek the advice of a lawyer. What are the requirements for signing a will in Oregon? To complete your will in Oregon: you must sign or confirm your will in front of two witnesses, and your witnesses must sign your will within a reasonable time before your death. Oregon Rev. Statutes Section 112,235. Do I have to have my will notarically notarically?) No, in Oregon, you don't have to notarically quantify your will to make it legal. However, Oregon allows you to make your will self-proving and you have to go to a notary if you want to do it. Self-smoking speeds up succession proceedings because the court can accept a will without contacting the witnesses who signed it. If you want your will to prove itself, you and your witnesses will go to the notary and sign an affidavit stating who you are and that each of you knew you were signing the will. Should I use my will to name the executor? Yes. In Oregon, you can use your will to appoint an executor to ensure that the provisions in your will are made after your death. Nolo will be software and online will produce a letter to the exeser that generally explains what the work requires. If you do not appoint an executor of the will, the probate court will decide to take over the work of liquidating your property. Can I revoke or change my will? In Oregon, you can withdraw or change your warranty at any time unless you have signed a no-stopper agreement. See Oregon Rev. Stat § 112.270. You can call off your drift by burning, tearing, cancelling, annihilation, or destroying a drift with the intention of canceling it by ordering someone else to burn, tear, cancel, erase or destroy your will in front of you and at least two witnesses, or make another drift that says it is disturbing the old one. You cannot use the first two options above to revoke only part of your will. Oregon Rev. Statutes Section 112.285. If you marry after you do your will, your will is automatically revoked if your spouse survives you if: state the language in your will that says it should not be annulled by future marriage or that you have considered marriage at the time you make a will to have a prenuptial agreement with your spouse that provides for your spouse, or says that your spouse has no rights to your estate, or has already entered into a registered domestic partnership with the person at the time you made your will, which you later married. Oregon Rev. Statutes Section 112.305. If you and your spouse divorce (or if the court decides that your marriage is not legal), Oregon law invokes any language in favor of your spouse, or that names your spouse to your executor. This rule does not apply if you expressly state in your will that divorce should not affect the provisions of your will. Oregon Rev. Statutes Section 112,315. If you have any concerns about the effects of divorce on your will, see a real estate planning lawyer for help. If you need to make changes to your will, it is best to recall it and create a new one. However, if you only have very simple changes to make, you can add a change to your existing will - this is called codicil. In either case, you will need to complete the changes with the same formalities that you used for the original reserve (see above). Where can I find Oregon laws on that will? You can find Oregon laws on wills here: Oregon Revised Statutes Volume 3 Landlord/Tenant, Domestic Relations, Probate Title 12 Probate Act Chapter 112 Of Intestate Succession and Wills. 01 of 20 Bob Pool/Photographer's Choice RF/Getty Images Address Historic Columbia River Hwy, Oregon, U.S. The first section of the picturesque Columbia River Highway, which ran between Portland and Dalles, originally opened in 1915. One of the first U.S. highways designed specifically for scenic tours, its final length of 350 miles (from Astoria to Pendleton) was completed in 1921. Part of this historic highway has been preserved, with parts still available for cars along U.S. Highway 30, and other parts open to cyclists and tourists. The western passable section that runs from Troutdale, east of Portland, to Multnomah Falls, is a fabulous Oregon attraction and should not be missed. You'll want to stop often on your way to see the picturesque views, hike to and around the great waterfalls, and take in the beauty of the Columbia River Gorge at sunset. 02 out of 20 courtesy of Draper Country Girls Farm Once Spring Sprung, Fruit Loop, in the Hood River area of Oregon's Columbia River Gorge, is a great destination. You will enjoy the surroundings, food and wine and a day of rest. And in autumn, it's harvest time. You can choose apples and pears and buy jams and jelly. The 35-mile Fruit Loop is a collection of farms, orchards, vineyards, wineries and interesting farms. They have opened their tasting rooms, orchards and farms to visitors who can enjoy wine or cider tasting, buy products and enjoy the stunning scenery of the Columbia River and majestic mountain. 03 out of 20 Although it is offseason for skiing and snowboarding, Mt. Hood what to offer. You can go hiking or go up to the snow line and throw snowballs. But the main attraction is the historic Timberline Lodge built in the 1930s. The cottage has become a symbol of a massive peak mountain like the mountain itself. Known to some as the Winter, Hunch Overlook Hotel depicted in snowdrift in the film, The Shining. Timberline Lodge is a showcase of 1930s Oregon craftsmanship. Massive beams, carved staircases and original furniture, bedspreads and curtains were designed and built by local workers during the Great Depression. The Lodge was officially dedicated in 1937 by President Franklin D. Roosevelt. One of the popular things you can do while at Timberline Lodge is have a brunch buffet, or enjoy a local-sourced Pacific Northwest dinner before cracking the fireplace. You can stay in the chalet and experience being on the mountain overnight when things calmed down. 04 of 20 TripSavvy/Alisha McDarris Portland's Washington Park is the center of interesting family-friendly attractions, including the Oregon Zoo, world forestry center discovery museum, Portland International Rose Test Garden, Portland Japanese Gardens, Portland Children's Museum and Hoyt Arboretum. You can spend all day or more exploring these attractions, as well as Washington Park hiking trails, playgrounds and other open spaces. If you're staying in Portland, this attraction is a must see – roses bloom around June each year and the views of the city and Mt. Hood from the garden is an iconic view of Portland. Japanese gardens have recently expanded and you can spend at least half a day wandering through beautiful trails, enjoying Japanese architecture and seeing koi waterfalls and ponds. There are excellent new chefs to try out their cuisine on a food cart (many brick and mortar restaurants started this way), huge culinary festivals such as the week-long Portland feast with both tasting events and intimate dinners, and carefully curated chef-driven group dinners such as those organized by Portland Food Adventures. Exploring the culinary side of Portland often takes you to small neighborhoods with narrow streets and lovingly restored old houses. The Fremont district has Acadia, a small bistro next door serving excellent Cajun-Creole cuisine. And on the quirky Alberta Street you can get amazing Spanish tapas in Urdaneta. 06 of 20 Lewis and Clark National Historic Park consists of 12 different units in Oregon and Washington states. The Fort Clatsop Visitor Center on oregon's north coast near Astoria is Oregon's main place to see, and the Lewis and Clark National Historic Park Interpretive Center is in Cape Disappointment State Park across the Columbia River in Washington (just take Astoria-Megler There are a number of things you can do on the Fort Clatsop site to get a sense of the hard-to-win Corps of Discoveries spent there between 1805-1806 and how they survived. You'll definitely want to spend time at the visitor center checking out informative exhibits, great Lewis and Clark history movies, and quality bookstores before you go out to explore the rest of the park, including Fort Clatsop, re-creation, and nature trails to spot notes from Lewis and Clark's famous expeditions. 07 of 20 Gary Weathers/Getty Images When in Astoria on oregon's north coast, make sure and visit the Astoria column. The Astoria Column, completed in 1926, commemorates the city's important role in American history. Murals that end up around the column depict such important events as the Lewis and Clark Expeditions, the destruction of the Tonquin ship, the first Astorians, and the arrival of the railroad. A spiral staircase inside the column takes energetic visitors to the viewing platform above. Whether you go ascent or not, you will have excellent views of Astoria, the mouth of the great Columbia River and the nearby lakes, rivers and mountains. 08 of 20 Gexyda/Flickr/CC BY 2.0 Yet another astoria attraction to make this list, the Columbia River Maritime Museum offers indoor and outdoor exhibits covering a wide range of topics related to the maritime past of the Northwest and present. Early European exploration, fishing industry, Coast Guard activity and vessels, and lighthouses are included in the exhibits, and considerable attention is paid to the Columbia River itself, including many dangers such as the infamous Columbia River Bar.
